‘The arrival of Mary, Queen of Scots in England in 1568 was the main cause of instability in Elizabethan government.’ How far do you agree? Explain your answer.

You may use in your answer:

- Mary's claim to the throne
- Religious divisions in the North

(You must also use information of your own.)

1. CRITERIA 1: MARY AS CATHOLIC FIGUREHEAD

CONTINUOUS PROSE LEVEL 4 EXEMPLAR RESPONSE (FULL MARKS • 12/12)

Notice: Every paragraph opens with a factor, gives precise evidence, and ends with a direct causal link.

PARAGRAPH 1 • STIMULUS 1 One crucial reason why succession was a serious issue was Elizabeth's vulnerability to fatal illness, epitomised by her near-fatal encounter with smallpox in October 1562. Because Elizabeth was unmarried and childless, her sudden illness induced acute panic across the Privy Council, who realised that had she died, England lacked a designated Protestant heir and would have plunged directly into catastrophic civil war. This existential fear prompted Parliament in 1563 and 1566 to aggressively petition the Queen to marry or name a successor. Elizabeth's persistent refusal to surrender her royal prerogative created severe political friction, keeping the Tudor dynasty permanently on the brink of extinction.

PARAGRAPH 2 • STIMULUS 2 Furthermore, the succession crisis was magnified exponentially by the dynastic threat posed by Mary, Queen of Scots. Arriving as a fugitive in England in 1568, Mary possessed a direct blood claim to the English crown as Henry VII's great-granddaughter. English Roman Catholics and continental powers viewed Elizabeth as illegitimate due to Henry VIII's unrecognised divorce from Catherine of Aragon, regarding Mary as England's rightful monarch. Mary's physical presence transformed a theoretical succession anxiety into an active military security crisis, providing Catholic conspirators with a viable adult figurehead around whom to rally, culminating in the 1569 Northern Rebellion.

PARAGRAPH 3 • OWN KNOWLEDGE Beyond the stimulus, the succession dilemma was fundamentally insoluble because any marital choice carried devastating diplomatic and domestic repercussions. Marrying a powerful foreign Catholic suitor—such as Philip II of Spain or Archduke Charles of Austria—threatened to subordinate English foreign policy to foreign Catholic interests, reviving the bitter resentments of Mary I's marriage to Philip. Conversely, marrying an English Protestant courtier like Robert Dudley inflamed intense factional jealousy within the Privy Council, where William Cecil feared Dudley's unchecked ascendancy. Consequently, remaining single was Elizabeth's calculated strategy to prevent civil war, even though it left the crown dangerously unstable.

EXAMINER COMPARISON • WHY MOST PUPILS DROP MARKS ON QUESTION 2

⚠ The Level 2 Narrative Trap (4–6 / 12 Marks):

Pupils describe the chronology of events without causal links: "First Elizabeth caught smallpox in 1562 and almost died. Then Parliament petitioned her to marry Robert Dudley. Later Mary, Queen of Scots fled to England." This tells a story rather than explaining WHY each factor made succession a destabilising threat.

🔗 The Level 4 Analytical Standard (10–12 / 12 Marks):

Every paragraph opens with a clear causal factor, supports it with precise evidence (1562 smallpox, 1563/66 Parliaments, 1568 arrival, Henry VII lineage), integrates substantial own knowledge beyond the stimulus (foreign marriage traps vs Dudley court factions), and explicitly links back to the question stem.
