Exam Sources & Interpretations

Source A: Point 4 of the 25-Point Programme, published in February 1920.

"None but members of the nation may be citizens of the state. None but those of German blood... may be members of the nation. No Jew, therefore, may be a member of the nation."

Source B (Contemporary Written Source):

From a diary of an early party member, Munich, 1921.

"When Hitler took the platform, the entire beer hall was silent with anticipation. He spoke for nearly two hours, moving from a slow, quiet whisper to a booming, furious rage against the treaty. His intense gaze and violent hand gestures drew everyone in. By the end, men and women were in tears, completely captured by his absolute belief that he was the savior of Germany."

Source C (Contemporary Written Source):

From the official DAP Twenty-Five Point Programme, declared February 1920.

"We demand the immediate destruction of the Treaty of Versailles and the unification of all Germans in a Greater Germany. We demand land and colonies to feed our population. Only those of German blood can be citizens; therefore, no Jew may be a citizen. The state's primary duty is to provide jobs and livelihoods for citizens."

Interpretation 1 (The Structured Ideology View):

The rapid expansion of the early Nazi Party was fundamentally driven by the targeted appeal of its 25-Point Programme. By cleverly combining aggressive nationalism, extreme anti-Semitism, and socialist welfare promises, the manifesto acted as a highly effective catch-all document. It offered simple, clear solutions and immediate scapegoats to multiple disgruntled classes, particularly the demobilized soldiers and lower middle class.

Interpretation 2 (The Charismatic Oratory View):

The Nazi Party's program was largely secondary to the hypnotic, personal magnetism of Adolf Hitler. In a politically chaotic Bavaria, Hitler emerged as a dynamic, modern communicator who rehearsed his speeches theatrically to project strength and conviction. It was his unique oratorical star power, combined with the physical violence of Ernst Röhm's SA, that attracted members and secured his absolute leadership over the movement.

Exam Sources & Interpretations

Source A: Adolf Hitler speaking at his trial for treason, February 1924.

"I alone bear the responsibility. But I am not a criminal because of that... There is no such thing as high treason against the traitors of 1918. I consider myself not a traitor, but a German, who wanted the best for his people."

Source B (Contemporary Written Source):

From a letter written by a local Nazi party organizer in Hanover, May 1928.

"Our election results are an absolute disaster; we have won only twelve seats in the Reichstag, and the public completely ignores us. People are happy with Stresemann's American loans and do not want to hear our warnings. But we must not lose heart. Our party is now highly organized, we have divided Germany into Gaue, and we have established our own youth and professional leagues. We are waiting for the economic storm to break."

Source C (Contemporary Written Source):

From notes taken at the Nazi Party conference in Bamberg, February 1926.

"The Leader spoke for over two hours, asserting that there can be no division within our ranks. He declared that the NSDAP must be run strictly according to the Führerprinzip (the Leadership Principle), which demands absolute, unquestioning obedience to him as the supreme leader. The socialist proposals of the northern Gauleiters have been completely rejected, and the 25-Point Programme is declared unalterable."

Interpretation 1 (The Political Failure View):

During the era of economic stabilization, the Nazi Party was an irrelevant, failing extremist group whose message was treated as a joke by the vast majority of voters. With hyperinflation resolved and national pride partially restored under Stresemann, support for political extremism withered away, leaving the NSDAP as a spent force that was largely ignored by the German public.

Interpretation 2 (The Vital Reorganization View):

The period between 1924 and 1928 was a highly successful and vital era of party reorganization. By establishing regional Gaue, creating a centralized bureaucracy, and asserting absolute control under the Führerprinzip, Hitler transformed a chaotic paramilitary group into a highly disciplined, national political machine ready to exploit a future economic crisis.

Exam Sources & Interpretations

"The economic situation is terrifying. Unemployment is rising every week. The Weimar politicians do nothing but argue. Many of my friends are turning to the National Socialists because they promise strong leadership and a way out of this misery."

Source B (Contemporary Written Source): From the diary of Luise Solnitz, a schoolteacher in Hamburg, March 1932.

There stood Hitler in a simple black coat, looking over the crowd of 120,000 people of all classes and ages. A forest of swastika flags unfurled, the joy of this moment showed itself in roaring salute. The crowd looked up to show Hitler with touching faith, as their helper, their savior, their deliverer from unbearable distress. He is the rescuer of the scholar, the farmer, the worker, and the unemployed.

Source C (Contemporary Written Source): From an article describing the conditions of the unemployed in Berlin, 1931.

The municipal lodging houses are filled to capacity with young, unemployed men. They completely fill the streets, standing or lying about in silence. The streets are grey, their faces are grey, and even the hair on their heads and the stubble on the cheeks of the youngest there was grey with dust and their adversity. They have lost all hope, having been completely abandoned by the Weimar government's welfare cuts.

Interpretation 1 (The Economic Depression View):

The Nazi rise to power was fundamentally caused by the catastrophic economic distress of the Great Depression. The sudden withdrawal of US loans caused businesses to collapse and pushed unemployment over 6 million, which completely paralyzed the democratic system and forced desperate voters to turn to extremist parties. Without this economic crisis, the Nazis would have remained on the political margins.

Interpretation 2 (The Hitler's Charisma View):

The primary driver behind the surge in Nazi support was the unique, charismatic appeal of Adolf Hitler. At a time of intense national despair, Hitler brilliantly projected himself as a dynamic, modern, and strong leader who stood above traditional party politics. His powerful public speaking and carefully staged campaigns convinced Germans of all classes that he alone understood their personal suffering and could rescue the nation.

Exam Sources & Interpretations

Source A: A comment by Franz von Papen to a conservative friend in January 1933.

"We have hired him! Within two months we will have pushed Hitler so far into a corner that he'll squeak."

Source B (Contemporary Written Source): From a letter written by Franz von Papen to President Hindenburg, January 1933.

The only way to resolve the political deadlock is to appoint Hitler as Chancellor of a coalition cabinet. I have agreed to serve as Vice-Chancellor, and the majority of cabinet ministers will be conservative. Your Excellency need not fear his radicalism; we have pushed Hitler so far into a corner that we will easily be able to control him like a puppet.

Source C (Contemporary Written Source): From a dispatch by an American journalist stationed in Berlin, December 1932.

The political gridlock is absolute. Chancellor von Schleicher has failed, and the streets are ruled by daily, violent battles between communist and Nazi paramilitaries. The public has completely lost faith in democracy. The government rules solely through unpopular emergency decrees, and the weary voice of the President is completely ignored.

Interpretation 1 (The Democratic Collapse View):

Hitler's rise to power was the inevitable result of the collapse of the Weimar democratic system. The Great Depression permanently paralyzed the Reichstag, forcing a reliance on Article 48 presidential emergency decrees that destroyed democratic legitimacy. By 1932, democracy was already dead, and the conservative elites had to hand power to Hitler because his party was the largest in the parliament.

Interpretation 2 (The Political Intrigue View):

Hitler's appointment as Chancellor was not inevitable, but was the direct result of secret political scheming and backstairs intrigue. The Nazi vote was actually declining by late 1932, and the party was running out of money. Hitler was only rescued because Franz von Papen, President Hindenburg, and conservative landowners made the fatal, cynical miscalculation that they could use his mass popularity to serve their own authoritarian goals.
