Assessment Question: How 'global' was Britain's transformation between 1450 and 1750?

Name: _____

Class: _____

Source A: The East Offering its Riches to Britannia (1778)

A ceiling painting by Spiridione Roma (1778), originally commissioned for the Revenue Committee Room at East India House in London (now held by the British Library). It is an allegorical painting showing Britannia receiving jewels, spices, and silk from Asia, Africa, and India. It highlights the ideology and wealth of the empire.

Source B: Foreign Trading Factories at Canton (Guangzhou)

A reverse glass painting by an unknown Chinese artist (c. 1805) currently held by the Peabody Essex Museum. It depicts the highly regulated district in Qing China where European companies operated, proving that Asian empires held immense global economic power.

Source C: The Financial Hub of London

An engraving of the Second Royal Exchange in London by Wenceslaus Hollar (1644), now held by the Metropolitan Museum of Art. By 1750, London was crowded with merchant ships and transformed into the financial center of global maritime trade.

Source D: Nautical Planisphere World Map

A world map created by Flemish cartographer Gerardus Mercator in 1569. Early modern maps revolutionized travel by introducing new projections for navigation, showing the massive ocean trade routes and the terrifying scale of global exploration.
