YEAR 8 ENQUIRY • 1600–1783

The First British Empire (1600–1783)

Chartered Trade, Transatlantic Slavery, Maroon Resistance & The American Revolution

PRIMARY VISUAL EVIDENCE • CORPORATE IMPERIAL STATECRAFT — Nathaniel Dance-Holland (c. 1773)

Following the 1757 Battle of Plassey and the 1765 Treaty of Allahabad, the East India Company transitioned from a maritime trading outfit into a military ruler collecting taxes from 20 million Bengalis. Nathaniel Dance portrayed Robert Clive not as an administrator, but as an imperial general:

1. STANCE OF IMPERIAL AUTHORITY:
Clive stands resolute in scarlet regimental uniform, sword belt fastened, projecting military command over Indian sovereign territories.

2. THE BENGAL BATTLEFIELD:
In the background, sepoy infantry drill beneath smoke and battle pennants, symbolising the privatised corporate army that conquered Bengal.

3. ROYAL & CORPORATE HONOURS:
Embroidered badges of the Order of the Bath honour Clive's elevation to the peerage funded by astronomical private plunder ('jagirs').

4. THE OBSCURED REALITY:
The painting glorifies military prestige while obscuring the horrific 1770 Bengal famine where corporate grain speculation devastated millions.

SCARLET COAT	DRAWN SWORD	BENGAL PLAIN
Crown recognition of Company military conquest.	Armed force as foundation of trade monopoly.	Vast territorial wealth seized from Mughals.

DISCIPLINARY SIGNIFICANCE: In 18th-century imperial expansion, portraiture transformed private corporate commanders into national martial heroes to justify unprecedented chartered monopolies to Parliament.

DISCIPLINARY HINGE QUESTION: HISTORICAL EVALUATION

Does this portrait portray Clive as an honourable servant of the British nation, or does it disguise a reckless corporate plunderer whose greed destabilised an entire subcontinent?

Primary Visual Evidence: Major-General Robert Clive, Baron Clive of Plassey • Nathaniel Dance-Holland (c. 1773) — NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY • LONDON
