SOURCE B

Presidential Emergency Decree under Article 48, Berlin, December 1931

From an official emergency decree signed by President Paul von Hindenburg and Chancellor Heinrich Brüning, published in the German legal gazette, December 1931.

"On the basis of Article 48 of the Reich Constitution, the following is decreed to secure the economy and finances: All public sector wages and salaries are reduced by ten percent. Unemployment relief payments are strictly curtailed. Prices of essential goods are reduced by decree." By ruling through presidential decree rather than parliament, Chancellor Brüning became known as the 'Hunger Chancellor', driving millions of desperate Germans towards radical political parties.

SOURCE C

Contemporary photograph of Nazi SA Stormtroopers, Berlin, July 1932

From a press photograph taken during the July 1932 Reichstag election campaign in Berlin. It shows uniformed SA stormtroopers parading in formation with swastika flags.

By July 1932, the SA numbered over 400,000 men—four times the size of the regular German Army. Their disciplined parades, martial brass bands, and street brawls with the Communist Rotfrontkämpferbund presented an image of dynamic youth, strength, and order to middle-class voters terrified of Bolshevik revolution during the Great Depression.

HISTORICAL INTERPRETATIONS 1 AND 2 Target: How and why historians differ (AO4)

INTERPRETATION 1

From an account by historian William Carr, A History of Germany 1815–1990 (1991)

"The Nazi Party grew into a mass movement primarily because the Great Depression shattered the economic and social foundations of the Weimar Republic. With six million Germans unemployed by 1932, millions of desperate middle-class voters, shopkeepers, and farmers turned to the NSDAP as the only radical alternative to Communism. In a democracy that had collapsed into economic paralysis, it was the despair produced by mass unemployment and Brüning's wage-cutting policies that drove voters in their millions to support Hitler."

INTERPRETATION 2

From an account by historian Richard J. Evans, The Coming of the Third Reich (2003)

"The rapid growth of Nazi support between 1929 and 1932 cannot be explained solely by economic distress. Other nations suffered mass unemployment without turning to fascism. What set the Nazis apart was their brilliant modern electioneering and Hitler's magnetic personal appeal. Goebbels orchestrated dynamic campaigns using aeroplanes, radio, and mass rallies, while the uniformed SA stormtroopers provided an intoxicating image of discipline and order on the streets. It was Nazi propaganda and paramilitary energy that captivated voters."
