Speech by Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels to Radio Directors, Berlin, March 1933

From an official address given by Dr. Joseph Goebbels to regional broadcasting directors in Berlin, March 1933, shortly after his appointment as Minister of Public Enlightenment and Propaganda.

"We make no bones about it: the radio belongs to us and to no one else! We will place radio in the service of our National Socialist idea, and no other idea shall be expressed here. Radio must be purged of all un-German elements. We intend to mobilize the minds of the entire nation so thoroughly that no foreign or hostile thought can find an audience."

SOURCE C

Contemporary photograph of the People's Radio (Volksempfänger VE301), Berlin, 1933

From an official photograph published in Germany, 1933. It shows the newly introduced Volksempfänger (People's Radio), commissioned by Joseph Goebbels.

The Volksempfänger was mass-produced to sell for only 76 Reichsmarks, roughly one week's wage for an average industrial worker. By 1939, over seventy percent of German households owned a radio set—the highest proportion in Europe. The sets were engineered with a limited shortwave receiver so that ordinary citizens could not easily listen to foreign broadcasts, ensuring that families heard only Nazi propaganda and Hitler's speeches.

HISTORICAL INTERPRETATIONS 1 AND 2

Target: How and why historians differ (AO4)

INTERPRETATION 1

From an account by historian David Welch, The Third Reich: Politics and Propaganda (2002)

"Nazi propaganda was remarkably successful in winning over the hearts and minds of the German people. Joseph Goebbels understood that propaganda could not rely solely on crude slogans; it had to appeal to existing national traditions and pride. Through the distribution of cheap 'People's Radios', the cinematic spectacles of Leni Riefenstahl, and the euphoric pageantry of the Nuremberg rallies, the regime created a genuine sense of national community (Volksgemeinschaft). For the majority of Germans between 1933 and 1939, conformity was based on genuine enthusiasm and admiration for Hitler rather than state coercion."

INTERPRETATION 2

From an account by historian Richard J. Evans, The Third Reich in Power (2005)

"The apparent unity of the German people was fundamentally an illusion created by the omnipresence of the terror state. While Goebbels' propaganda was loud and relentless, ordinary Germans were far more cynical and detached than official rallies suggested. What truly controlled attitudes was the constant threat of denunciation to the Gestapo, the pervasive network of SS surveillance, and the dread of protective custody in concentration camps like Dachau. Germans did not conform because they believed every word broadcast on the radio; they conformed because speaking out meant arrest, torture, and ruin."
